

America's Next National Park - The Maine Woods National Park

A Premier Sustainability Presentation

Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award-Winning folk singer Pete Seeger states, "Hooray for the good people of Maine, who are pushing for a Maine Woods National Park, and will save these priceless lakes and streams from commercial exploitation." Inspiration from iconic figures such as Pete Seeger epitomize the American spirit and reinforce the importance and urgency with protecting our country's landscape and wildlife by rallying people to create the proposed Maine Woods National Park.

Saving America the beautiful sustains our earth, its precious resources, and all species, human and wild. For society to take the necessary steps and make bold changes in the area of sustainability and to protect our planet and ourselves, we must realize that our earth is slowly dying and we need to be proactive with rescuing it, rather than reactive. This presentation on sustainability, profiles a project that demonstrates proactive leadership and rouses and teaches audiences, in a stimulating manner, how to embrace sustainability and contribute to the care and rescue of our earth 365 days a year.

Since 2008 award-winning authors and photography team, Thomas Mark Szelog and Lee Ann Szelog, have logged over 15,000 miles putting a face to the land that is the proposed 3.2 million acre Maine Woods National Park, an area larger than Yellowstone and Yosemite National Parks combined. Through their Maine Woods National Park Photo-Documentation Project they provide inspiration, education, and motivation, through photographs and words, to encourage society, nationwide, to work together in the spirit of cooperation to create the Maine Woods National Park for the benefit of nature, wildlife, our planet and all mankind. In this visually-rich, multi-media presentation you will explore this astounding ecosystem, learn about the status of the proposed Maine Woods National Park and the physical, emotional and financial benefits it will impart. Lee Ann Szelog also shares the wisdom, inspiration and insight that guide her and Tom on this quest in order to help others embrace sustainability through foresight and discipline and take responsibility to make the necessary changes to ensure all species, human and wild, continue to have earth to call home. This presentation and the Project embody the heart of sustainability, vision and leadership, awakening peoples' environmental conscience to think and act with determination for our benefit and that of our earth and America, the beautiful.

To explore the proposed Maine Woods National Park, visit www.mainewoodsnationalpark.com.

What audiences say about the Lee Ann Szelog:

"Your presentation was moving, thoughtful, and left me wanting more; I have never listened to a presentation, and felt such emotions from one end of the spectrum to the other." Diane Marion

"I was especially taken with the intimate relationship Lee quickly developed with the audience."
Michael Culver

"Lee Ann's presentation provides a refreshing change of pace in the realm of sustainability programs, emotionally stirring audiences and inspiring them to think and act in a manner that benefits our earth." Laurie Bouchard

"Progress is not always about building the newest, most high-tech building, equipment, or device. Sometimes progress means having the courage and acumen to preserve those things that don't need improved, such as nature, wildlife and earth itself. Protection of this masterpiece we call earth begins with awareness and each one of us taking an active and brave role in its protection 365 days per year," states Lee Ann Szelog

Lee Ann Szelog
Speaker, author, inspirier
Bear Brook Cabin
P.O. Box 36
Whitefield, Maine 04353
www.mainewoodsnationalpark.com

To schedule a date for this presentation to stir your audience, contact Lee Ann Szelog at:

Phone: 207-549-5151
leeann@mainewoodsnationalpark.com

